National seminar on 'Banking Professor generates QR code to before and after nationalisation'

BINI

CAMPUS: The department of Economics, St Aloysius College (Autonomous) will organise one-day national level seminar here on Friday. The theme of the seminar is 'Banking before and after Nationalisation'.

Allen C A Pereira, former chairman and managing director, Bank of Maharashtra, and former director, National Institute of Bank Management will be the chief guest of the seminar.

A press release issued by the department stated that the nationalisation of 14 major private commercial banks estimated to be controlling more than 70 per cent of the deposits in the country, has been termed as a major turning point in economic history of India.

Questions such as why banks were nationalised, how has the banking sector fared in these five decades of nationalisation, what are the challenges faced by them at present, will be considered during the seminar.

"On July 19, 1969, 14 banks were nationalised. And now it is 50 years of this nationalisation. So we thought we will conduct a seminar on this issue and on this same date," said Dr Priya Shetty, HOD of Economics Department.

Dr G V Joshi, renowned economist, Dr T Mallikarjunappa, professor, department of MBA and dean faculty of Commerce, Mangalore University, T R Bhat, former director, Corporation Bank and socialactivist, will be the resource persons. They will address on Nationalised Banks as Catalysts of change, the Insolvency and Bankruptcy Code, the Corporate Sector and the Role of Banks in India and the Nationalised Banks: Challenges Ahead, respectively. "As of now including our students and people from Karnataka and Kerala around 375 participants have registered of the seminar," Dr Shetty added. Dr Praveen Martis SJ, principal, SAC will preside over the seminar.

MANGALORE: The 'Fern Doctor' of Mangaluru, Professor Smitha Hegde has now launched a crusade against felling of trees by developing a Quick Response (QR) Code to save the city, some greenery. The Nitte University Centre for Science Education and Research (NUCSER) Professor Dr Smitha Hegde has involved her students to develop the code for all the trees on the campus.

As many as ten students have volunteered for the project wherein they have been tasked with documenting over 1900 trees which were earlier geotagged by Dr Smitha and her team. As of now, over 100 trees have received QR codes and a quick scan on the mobile will reveal the tree's botanical name, the common name, its origin and mind you, its benefits as well."If you walk on the streets of Hampankatta or Falnir, you'll notice very few trees. Most of the trees have been felled for road widening projects," said Smitha.Plant saplings were not planned and planted randomly on either side of the road, only to be cut down to accommodate further road works.

QR codes on trees are a perfect way to know about a tree. "It is something like when you meet a person for the first time. you would ask his/her name. Isn't that a way to build a bond?" argues Prof Smitha. She now plans to include students from other institutions of the campus in the project. The novel initiative was launched to commemorate the International Day of Forest. A Pteridologist, Smitha has been relentlessly working on to consively worked on ferns of the Kudremukh National Park region. In a span of one year, she had also audited the plants and geo-tagged them at her former employer's campus at St Aloysius College.

In due course, Dr Smitha says she wants the policymakers to take cognizance of the importance and role of the tree and further intends to roll out a similar drive to conserve trees in the public sphere.
